PARENTS ARE PROTECTORS

This month in our four-month series, we continue to look at three more of the ten predictors of success at school with Mandi Moore. To get the most value out of their children's Classical Christian education, she dives into the 10 things that parents can commit to, under three primary categories. This month, we will look at points five, six and seven under parents are protectors.

PARENTS PROTECT THEIR CHILDREN FROM MALFORMATION

God designed human beings with very clear instructions on how to flourish and how not to flourish, yet gives us the choice. Parents and Classical Christian Schools try to help kids learn how to flourish, but they need protection until they are fully formed and capable of healthy decision-making. Mandi requests that parents protect their children in three ways.

Limiting Screens and Supervising Internet

In Mandi's opinion, this is the number one threat to the Classical Christian movement and to schools fulfilling their mission because screens really undermine everything we're trying to do. As mentioned last month, the habit of attention is particularly vulnerable to being lost with increased screen time.

Studies on Social Media and Smartphones continue to reveal that these are the number one threat to our children in America right now. At the Ambrose School, where Mandi is a Dean, parents have joined together to sign the Postman's Pledge and restrict cell phone usage until the age of eighteen, when their brains are properly formed.

Does this seem excessive to you? Did you know, that Mac executives pay huge sums of money to send their own children to schools, where these things are not allowed? They recognize the immense danger these products have on our children.

Mandi explains, "I have a background in physical therapy. I've worked with traumatic brain injury. The state of the brain matters for all of life. Your body is an integrated thing, and so any injury to your body is actually going to harm your life. So at all costs we need to protect our students' minds until they are formed until they're an adult age to where they can start making those decisions for themselves and use it responsibly."

Protect Against Pop Culture

Many parents don't realize the harm resulting from allowing pop culture into the home and how much it affects our children's souls. Protecting from Pop Culture piggybacks on the previous protection because most pop culture enters through cell phones and social media.

For example, the culture that says, 'If I don't have a phone or text all the time, I'm weird.' is an actual battle for their soul. Do we want our children to love God or be popular? Do we want them to fit into what the world thinks they should be? Mandi reflects, "I can usually tell when any of my students get a phone because I will notice subtle changes in their personality or how engaged they are." They start to view their Classical School negatively because it's not creating in them who the world says they should be.

"Every tool we allow our child to hand up changes them fundamentally. It's not just the child using the tool. It's the tool shaping the child at the same time. Mandi recommends that parents read everything that Neil Postman wrote because he was way ahead of his time in warning parents. "Hey, we need to step back and consider that, yes, technology is great in many ways, but it comes at a cost. It will shape you, whether you think it will or not. It will shape your thinking. It will shape the way that you live."

Prevent Addictions

The last way Mandi calls parents to protect their children from malformation is to guard against addictions. "When kids have screen time, or they have unsupervised internet access, they are going to become addicted to porn. They're going to become addicted to social media. They are going to become addicted to screen time in general, binge-watching, that sort of thing. It's just, it's a neurological fact."

Parents will ask, "What's the right age to give your child a phone?" And we say, "Well, as soon as you want them addicted to porn, that's when, for boys, that's when you give them a phone." Mandi continues, "I think it is time for parents to wake up because this is predatory. This is selfish people looking to gain from our children, and parents do need to wake up."
